We hope that this information will make your experience more positive!

When a referral is made for endodontics it is often accompanied by some level of anxiety for our patients. We now can help you attain the goal of a healthy mouth by offering oral conscious sedation.

Oral conscious sedation provides you a safe and effective means to help overcome fear and anxiety. There is a choice of sedation medication that can be used. We review many factors – including your health history – to choose the medication that is right. The medications have very good safety backgrounds which gives us great confidence in using them. There is also a medication to FULLY reverse the effects chairside.

To ensure your safety there is continuous monitoring of your vital signs with state of the art pulse oximeters and blood pressure is recorded every five minutes. Baseline readings are taken at the consultation appointment so we know what is normal for each patient.

The most common side effects of the sedation medication are dry mouth and hiccups. The hiccups usually last only a few moments and the dry mouth wears off with the medication.

Dr. Wong and Dr. Manders both have the qualifications that allow them to hold the New York State certificate for Enteral Conscious Sedation. Currently, Connecticut has no requirement. Please call us with any questions.
